In DRAGON DREAMS, our heroine, young Liza McGwen is lonely. She really, really wants a pet. She has asked nicely and received a resounding “No!” for an answer. It is not any fun to live in a neighborhood with no other kids. There are just a bunch of grouchy adults—well, one grouchy adult and even she has a pet—if you can call a great big bug-eyed wrinkly monster with truly terrifying teeth named Slubber, a pet. Liza, being the good girl that she is, volunteers at the public library. While dusting a back room, dreaming about how much fun she and her pet would have, if she had a pet, she finds an ominous, yet compelling book of spells. As fate would have it, one of the spells is how to conjuring up your very own pet. What’s a lonely girl to do? Ah yes, but the spell may have worked too well. Liza was not expecting a DRAGON! Now all she has to do is talk her mother into letting her keep it. Oh, and find a way for Slubber and her dragon, Zed, to get along. It is going to be an uproarious adventure until Liza gets her dream to come true.
